We're against all forms of family and domestic violence

Family and domestic violence takes different forms and affects individuals in our community differently. While most commonly seen between intimate partner relationships, it can also take form in all types of families, kinship networks and intergenerational relationships including First Nation's people.

Family and domestic violence can take different forms, including but not limited to:

- economic or financial abuse
- psychological mistreatment
- physical, social, or sexual abuse
- emotional abuse and coercion
- behaviours that hurt, frighten, intimidate, or isolate
- stalking, cyber stalking and technology enabled abuse
- damage to property.

Origin is committed to protecting customers affected by family and domestic violence. This policy explains how Origin implements these protections for its residential and small business customer who buy electricity and natural gas from Origin.

Our team is here for you

We look for ways to support our customers who may be experiencing family and domestic violence. We train our team to:

- identify and engage appropriately and effectively with customers, being sensitive and respectful of customers' circumstances
- understand the nature and impacts of family and domestic violence
- apply this policy effectively, providing assistance and answering questions you have about it.

We also train leaders and staff who design our processes to ensure customer safety is always prioritised and their information is protected.

You may want a support person or representative to contact us for you. This could be a financial counsellor, social worker, family member or friend. If so, please tell us who they are so you can allow them to speak for you. If you agree, we'll talk to them like we would with you, following your instructions and privacy rules.

Keeping you safe

We will not provide unauthorised access to your personal information and we'll do our best to protect your information – we'll let you know this when we talk to you.

If you're experiencing family and domestic violence, we'll:

- not ask you to provide documentary evidence about your circumstances
- check how you'd like us to safely communicate with you and record that in our systems. For example, if you currently receive correspondence via post, but you'd like us to change this to email/SMS ongoing, we'll change this in consultation with you. and we'll do our best to protect your information – we'll let you know this when we talk to you. We'll then communicate with you using this method(s).
- mark your account in our internal system so our team are aware of your circumstances and you don't need to explain them to our team again, and to keep your account and information secure
- offer to add a password to your account, which will be an additional barrier preventing unauthorised access to your account
- check if you have additional account holders. If you're the main account holder, in consultation with you, we'll remove additional account holders that should no longer be associated with the account
- ask if you're an additional account holder listed on another account. If you tell us you're an additional account holder listed on someone else's account, we'll let you know of any consequences associated with this when we speak to you
- offer you information about external support services at a time and in a way that's safe, respectful and appropriate for you
- prioritise your safety and think about your circumstances in all our interactions with you.

You may also use or want to use Origin's My Account or mobile app. If you choose to use these and your password to access may have been compromised, we recommend you update your password to prevent unauthorised access.

Our privacy policy is also relevant to how we manage your information – visit originenergy.com.au/privacy to find out more.

If you're having trouble paying your bills

Family and domestic violence can make paying bills more challenging.

So we can best support you, it's important that you contact us to let us know about your circumstances and that you stay in contact with us. Please make sure we have your up-to-date contact details.

If you're experiencing payment difficulties, we'll offer you support under the following programs:

- NSW, QLD, SA, ACT, WA customers – our hardship program, Power On
- Victorian customers – assistance under the Victorian Payment Difficulties Framework.

Our team aims to work with you to tailor a sustainable solution based on your circumstances. Assistance available to you may include:

- setting up a payment plan to suit your needs
- checking if you're eligible for government concessions and grants
- enabling Centrepay as your payment method
- providing you with energy efficiency advice
- not charging late payment fees.

We'll also take into account whether another person contributed to the debt on any accounts in your name. For customers with a Western Australian supply address with debt, this may include reducing or waiving debt.

For more information, visit originenergy.com.au/financial-support.

While you're receiving support as a customer affected by family and domestic violence and/or receiving assistance under the above programs for customers experiencing payment difficulties, you'll be protected from our standard debt management and disconnection for non-payment processes and we'll be mindful of the impact on you.

We will not arrange for the disconnection of energy at your supply address after you tell us about your situation unless:

- you tell us you've moved out
- you ask us to disconnect your supply
- there are safety reasons that make it necessary to disconnect your supply
- there's an emergency that requires disconnection of your supply
- energy has been used illegally at your supply address, or
- disconnection is a planned interruption and we provide you with notice as required by the regulations.
